SALT BROOKS IN AFRICA .- Mr. Audon, who returned to London a while ago from a two years' stay in Shoa, reports an interest ing discovery at Lake Assal, which is in East Africa, severa, days march inland from the Bay of Tadjoura. This is one of the most remarkable of lakes, and is one of the few spots in Africa that is below the level of the sea the surface of Lake Assal reing about 375 feet below the Indian Ocean. The lake has no outlet, and one of its beaches, formerly a part of the lake, is little else than salt, which is carried for sale far and wide over East Africa The lake is noted for its intensely salt waters, and, as previous white visitors never found any stream run-ning into it, though it seemed to preserve a constant level, it was thought that it had a subterravean connection with the Indian Ocean. Mr. Audon's party was more fortu-nate. Though the lake is walled in by precipices and mountains, they succeeded in finding three little brooks babbling over the stones, a good deal like our own mountain streams and throwing themselves into the streams and throwing themselves that the lake. The peculiarity of these brooks is that they are salt. There is no doubt, therefore, that they come from the Bay of Tadjoura, and a little of the Indian Ocean is constantly filtering into the lake, just enough to keep it at about the same level. As evaporation goes on the saine depost s are constantly increasing, and the waters of Lake Assal are said to be heavier and more intensely sait even than those of the Dard
